Hello again (see attached). Lots of pictures, hope I don't overload anybody's Inbox.

Where Denise & I drove through the Southern Appalachians last week, this week I drove through the more Northern portion, to Liverpool, NY.

One of the noticeable differences was that last week we went into the fog at the tops of the mountains. This week, the fog was in the valleys, and the tops were sunny and clear. Lots of changing leaf colors, including my favorite photo spot – Township Road 378 (refer to postcards dated 12 FEB 2008, 20 AUG 2007 & 26 MAR 2007).

On this trip was the second implementation of TacomaCAM. I'll have to wait until I get home to see how well it worked, but the preliminary results are encouraging.

I also used my GPS to plot my path real-time on Google Earth satellite imagery. I've got to tell you, as someone who writes hardware/software interfaces for a living, I wasn't impressed with Google Earth's ability to keep up. But it is pretty good at displaying the whole trip when it was complete. NOTE that in the image the terrain elevation is magnified (x2) for effect.

This trip I tried to drive a different path than I had in the past. It took me up the West Bank of Seneca Lake, one of New York's Finger Lakes.

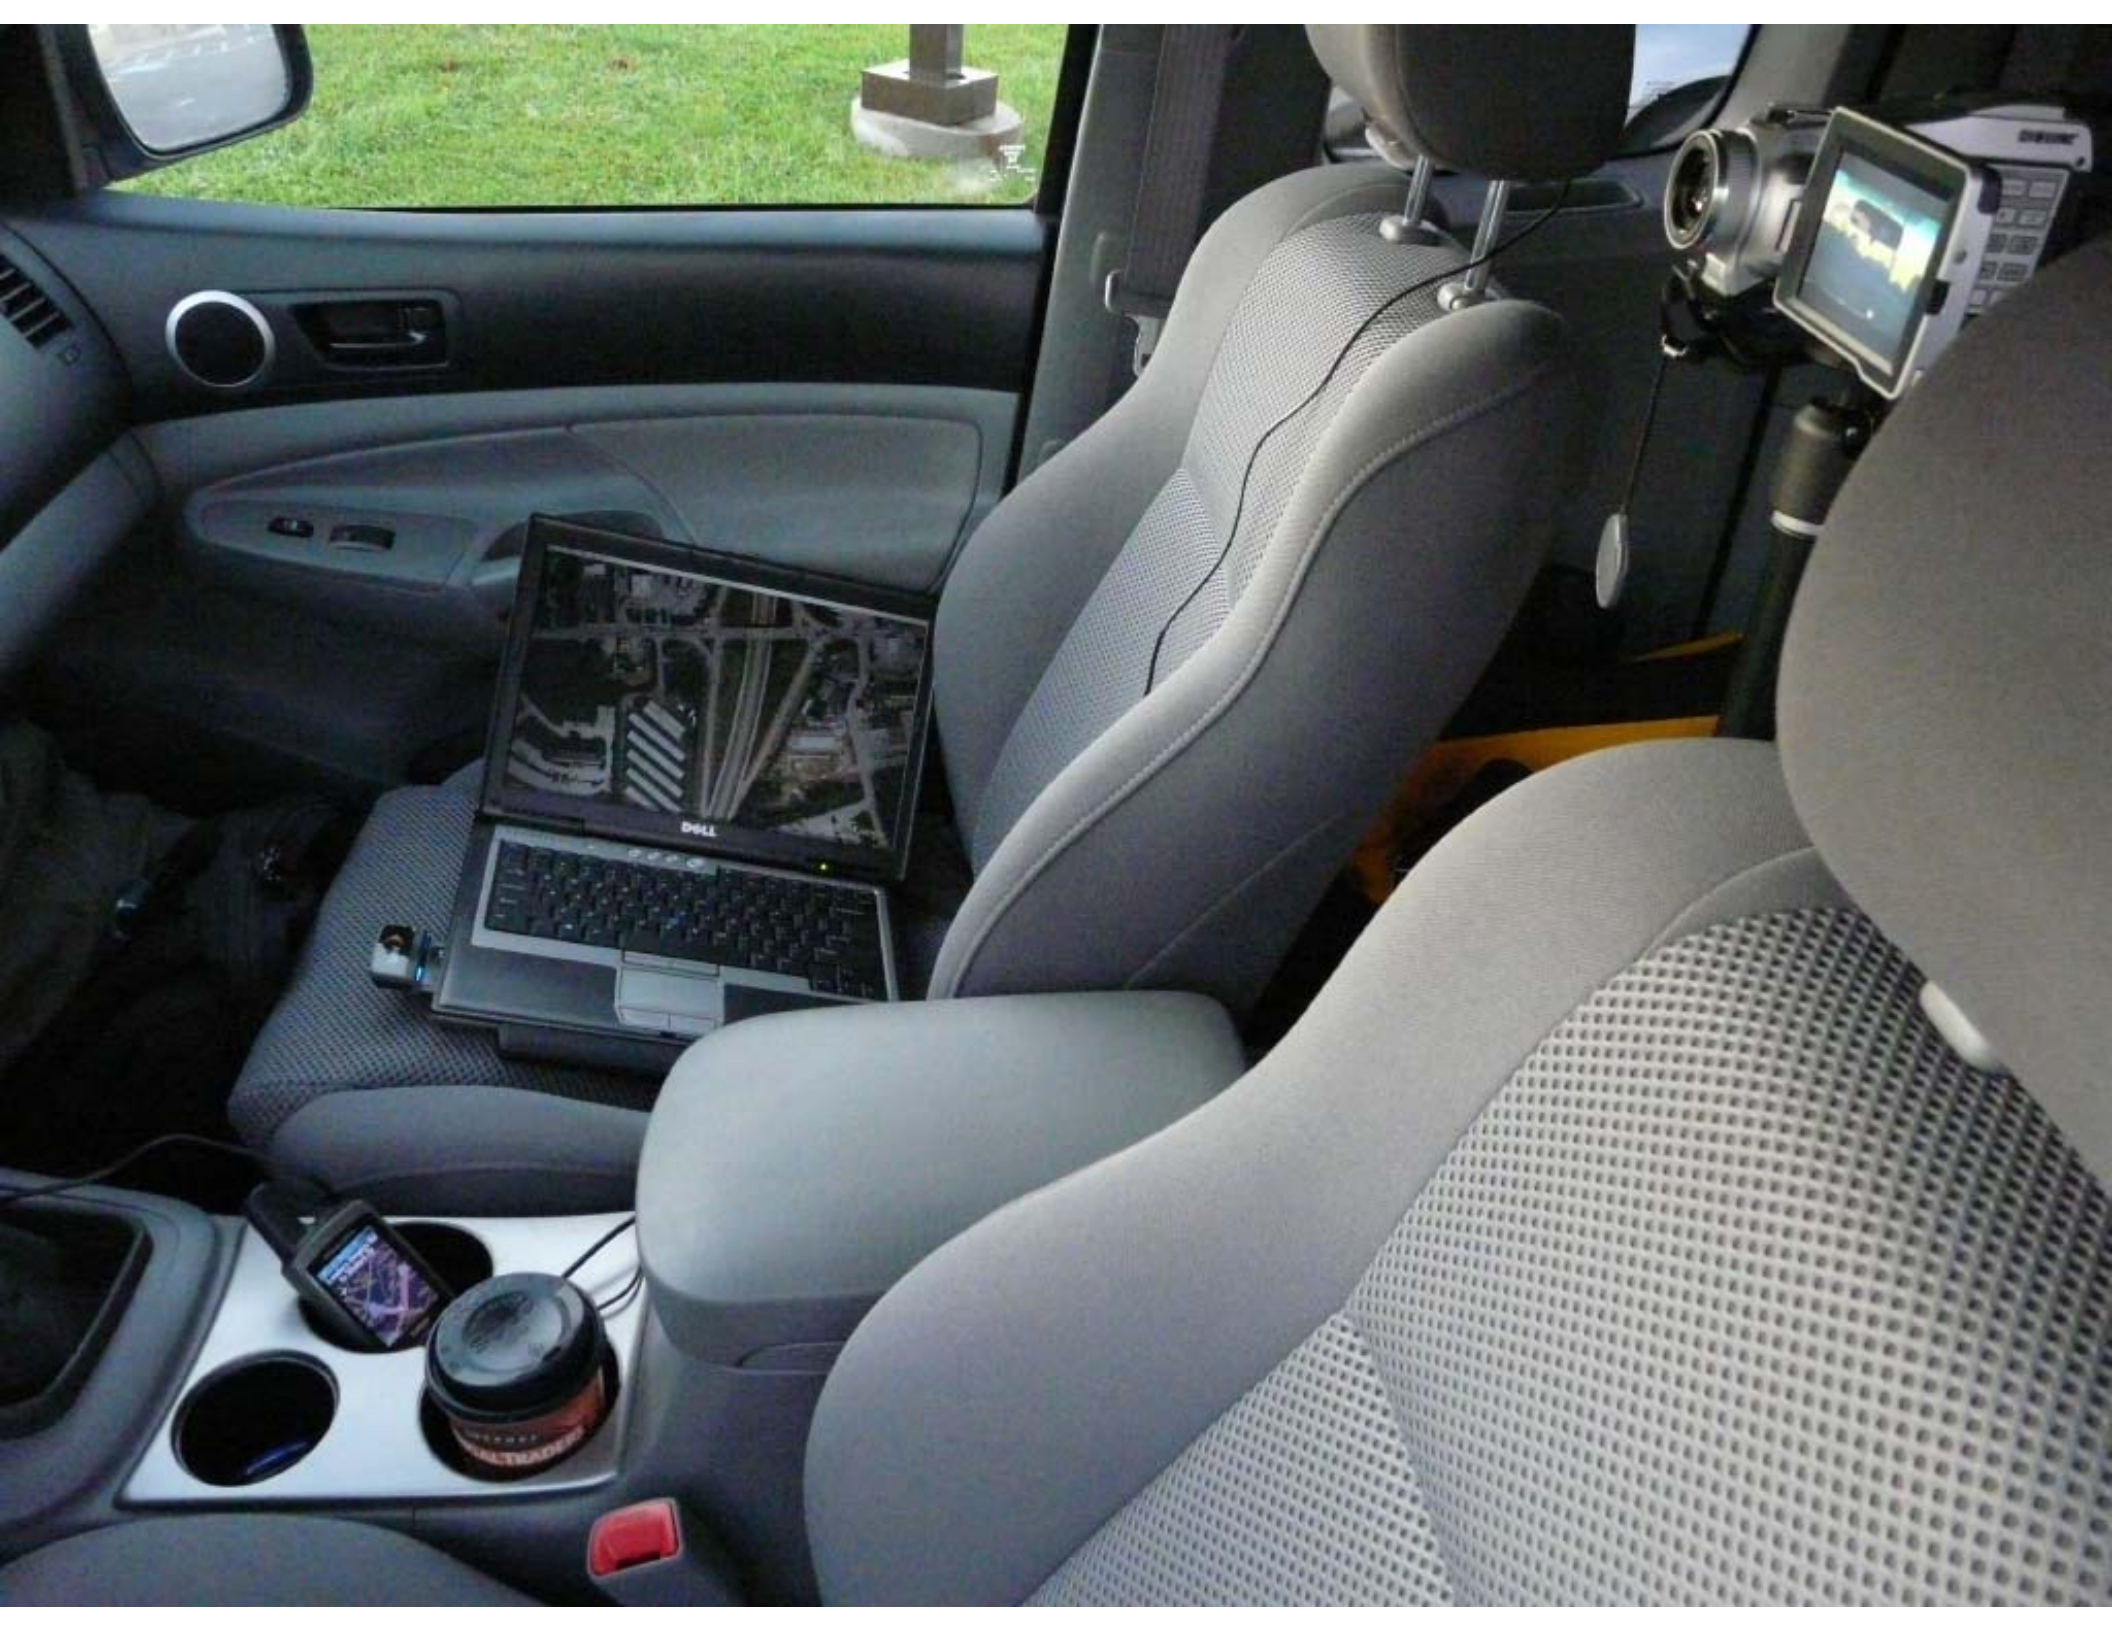

It was there, at the North end of the lake, where I walked out onto the long pier and saw the Warning posted. It scared the bejeebes out of me and I took off running.

Happy Halloween,
G.
